

30 September 2020

Bio for Robert Bryce

Robert Bryce has been writing about energy, power, innovation, and politics for three decades. He has published six books in which he has covered everything from Enron's bankruptcy and corn ethanol to the digitization of drilling rigs and the future of the electric grid. His latest book, *A Question of Power: Electricity and the Wealth of Nations*, was published in March by his longtime publisher, PublicAffairs. Bryce is also the executive producer and co-writer of a feature-length documentary called *Juice: How Electricity Explains the World* which was released in June. He is also the host of the *Power Hungry Podcast*, which is available on all of the major podcast platforms.

In April 2020, Bryce joined the *Foundation for Research on Equal Opportunity* as a visiting fellow. His articles have appeared in numerous publications including the Wall Street Journal, New York Times, New York Post, and Sydney Morning Herald. Bryce has appeared on dozens of media outlets ranging from Fox News to Al Jazeera and has given more than 300 invited or keynote lectures to a myriad of groups including the Marine Corps War College, Jadavpur University, and a wide variety of professional associations and corporations. He has testified before the U.S. Senate three times and his books and essays have been translated into four foreign languages. He lives in Austin, Texas, with his wife, Lorin, who is an art teacher and master potter.